penter boldly applied to Rufus Choate on. for a place to his office. It is said that the great lawyer was impressed by the manly appearance of the youthful applithat there was not, he ordered a table to set young Carpenter to work. Half by way of a test and half by way of a jobe, before leaving for court he handed the young stude t a letter to answer from a country attorney asking Mr. Choate's pinion upon a question of law. Young Carpenter worked diligently all day, emhodying the result of his work in a carefully prepared letter to the correspond ent. What was Mr. Choute's surprise on his return to find that the letter contained the very epitome of the law stated in the clearest and conciso t terms Reading it carefully over a second time. be said : "I guess I can put R. Cheut to the end of that and tell the fellow to send me $100." The name was attached the letter sent, and the money quickly returned. From that hour young Car penter was ingratiated into the siles on and favor of his illustrious patron and through all the dark hours that fol lowed the sun of that great friendship never passed behind a cloud. In 18f he took up his residence at Beloit, Wisnow a young and thrifty city, but the more like a thrifty New England village Mr. Carpenter entered no obscure West orn hamlet, as has been so often said. but mingled at once with the highes social refinement, and met at the bar some of the ablest lawyers of the North west. He soon became afflicted with tally blind for two years. Going to New York city for treatment, he met with at experience which borders on the sen sational. He had exhausted all his means and being blind and among strangers had prepared and expected to go to the County House the next day, when that night the long-expected and mys teriously delayed draft from Mr. Chosts came to hand, and let light, if not inte his eyes, into his very heart and soul Again returning to the West, and regaining his eyesight, he entered actively upon the practice of his profession .-Congressman Williams Eulogy.

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO. The strength of the army under the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo was 49,608 infantry, 12,402 cavalry, and 5,-645 artillery men, with 156 guns. But of this total of 67,655 men scarcely 24,-000 were British. There were about 6,000 men of the old German Legion with the Duke; these were veteran troops, and of excellent quality. But the rest of the semy was made up of Hanoverians, Brunswickers, Nassauers, Dutch and Belgians, many of whom were tried soldiers, and fought well, but many had been lately levied. Napoleon's army at Waterloo consisted of 48,-950 infantry, 15,765 cavalry, 7,232 artillerymen, being a total of 71,941 men and 246 guns. They are described as the clite of the national force of France; and of all of the numerous gallant armies which that martial and has poured forth, never was one braver, or better dishost that took up its position at Waterloo on the morning of June 18, 1815." Napoleon began the battle at about 11:30 a. m., by directing a powerful force from his left wing, under his brother, Prince Jerome, to attack Houromont, the fight at which is so graphically described by Victor Hugo, in "Les Miserables," The great battle lasted until about 9 o'clock, and the Pruscians drove the French fugitives before them throughout the night. The army under the Duke of Wellington lost nearly 15,000 men in killed and wounded and the loss of the Prussian army was nearly 7,000 more. The loss of the French was upward of 30,000 men, beale 227 pieces of artillery.

MAKING CONVERSATION.

When a man asks a question I look im in the face. If I see no inquiry asked me about the coldness of this winter as compared with others recently. I looked at him ; his face expressed no more curiosity or relation to me than a custard pudding. I made him a random answer. I put him off until he was in carnest. He wanted to make conversation. - Emerson.

It weighed 182 pounds. Another enormous piece of 130 pounds weight was found nside a whale near the Windward islands, and sold for $2,500. The true mbergris, which is a morbid secretion of the spermaceti whale, gives out a fragrant smell when a hot needle is thrust into it, and it also melts like fat, but the counterfeit often sold instead of the real thing does not present these features. Men engaged in whale fishing are on the lookout for ambergris, and usually find most of it in the torpid, sick or very lean fish, consequently it would sppear to be, what all medical practitioners say it is, the product of a diseased liver.
